THE NATIONAL HYMN

HOW A DIVINITY STUDENT WROTE
"MY COUNTRY, 'TIS OF THEE."

Rev. Samuel Francis Smith Got the Idea From German Music—First Sang in Boston—Touched a Chord in His Countrymen's Hearts.

Seventy years ago this Fourth of July the children of Park Street church, Boston, celebrating the day of American independence, sang for the first time the immortal national hymn, "America" ("My Country, 'Tis of Thee"). The fervent lines spread like wildfire all over the land, and succeeding generations in constantly growing millions have sung it on the anniversary of the day of national freedom.

It has kept pace with the march of the country's growth and has been adopted as the national hymn of eighty millions of freemen. How grandly the chorus has grown in seventy years! From the lisping treble of the children of long ago it will swell in grand volume this Fourth of July from millions of throats across a vast continent and rise from the islands of the seas which girt the two hemispheres.

When the civil war came, its patriotic words burned deep in the hearts of men. The Yankee soldiers sang "America" together around camp and bivouac, and "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," was heard in swamp and forest, behind redoubts and from hospital cots when fighting was over.

Its words have been chanted from the decks of ships, under the stars and stripes, in rough weather and calm, in battle and in peace, and the Rev. Dr. Smith himself, author of the hymn, seated among the dead remains of Pompeii, heard a band of American tourists lift its chorus to the sky.

When Samuel Francis Smith wrote the poem which was to bring him fame and prove a perennial poem of patriotism to his countrymen, he was an un-

Tragedy Of a Clock

A few miles from Bardstown, Ky., lives Nathan Colerain and his maiden sister, who is now past middle life. Miss Patsy Colerain is a lady of refinement and bears traces of great youthful beauty. For nearly forty years she has not gone beyond the precincts of her own yard. There is a tragic story connected with her estrangement from the world.

In the hall of the Colerain mansion is an old fashioned clock over 100 years old. It is one of the big clocks so common in the early part of the last century. Its hands have not moved since one fateful night in 1864 when it played an important part in a bloody tragedy that broke Miss Patsy Colerain's heart and enveloped her life in a pall of gloom that will never be lifted this side of the grave.

In 1864 Miss Patsy Colerain was considered one of the handsomest young women in Nelson county. Of an old line family, wealthy in her own name, she was naturally much sought after and had suitors by the score. Of course she had but one choice, and that was Reuben Morehead, a descendant of one of Kentucky's governors, who claimed Nelson county as his birthplace. Young Morehead was an orphan who had been reared by a neighboring farmer. Patsy had known him all her life and had loved him as far back as she could remember.

The war broke out, and Reuben took up arms for the north. Then followed sad days for the young girl. Her father sickened and died, and her only brother was in the far south battling for the Confederacy. Thus she was left with only the faithful negro slaves and a nephew barely in his teens.

At this time the neighborhood was full of guerrillas. "Sue" Mundy and his gang were terrorizing that entire section, and soldiers and civilians alike were falling at their hands. The outlaws were frequently at the Colerain house, and while Patsy had never suffered any indignities from them, she was in constant terror lest she might.

One rainy night in April, 1864, Miss Colerain was sitting before a cheerful fire, her mind busy with thoughts of her absent lover, when suddenly the door opened and young Morehead, attired in a handsome uniform, stood before her. Before she could speak the young soldier caught her in his arms and showered kisses upon her blushing face.

A second later she broke from his embrace, and, trembling with fright, she remonstrated with him for daring to leave his command and come there alone. The country, she said, was swarming with guerrillas and other enemies to his cause and that if he was caught there his life would pay the penalty. He soon reassured her, however, and convinced her that he could reach his lines, which were not far away, without the least danger to himself.

Happy to have him with her, she nestled up to him on the old sofa, and together they talked of love and the happy times when the cruel war should be over and they should be united, never to part.

While thus engaged there came above the patter of the rain the tramping of many horses. The lovers' faces blanched with terror, for they knew that enemies were upon them. Going to the window, Patsy saw by the faint light of the moon breaking through the clouds that which caused her heart to cease to beat and paralyzed her every thought and motion. The yard was filled with half-drunken guerrillas.

When her speech at last came to her, she turned to her lover, who was now at her side, and said in scarcely audible tones:

"My God, Reuben; it is 'Sue' Mundy and his gang. If they catch you here, it is certain death! Oh, what shall we do?"

By this time the guerrillas were at the door clamoring for admittance. Then it was that an idea came to the distressed girl.

"The old clock, Reuben, get into that," she said. "It is plenty large, and they will never discover you there."

The young man lost no time in clambering into the barrel of the clock, and his sweetheart fastened the door. Then, with a lighter heart, she admitted the guerrillas, who were growling and cursing at the delay.

Filing through the long hall into the cozy sitting room, they took seats and demanded refreshments. Patsy left to comply with their demands, but she had hardly left the dining room when she heard the guerrillas raving and cursing and the report of firearms.

Realizing the worst, she hurried back and reached the hall just in time to witness the murderous outlaws dragging the dead body of her lover from the old clock. At this juncture again came the tramp of horses, followed by more firing and commotion, and then to Patsy came a blank.

For weeks the girl hovered between life and death, a victim of brain fever. When the disease left her, she was but a wreck of her former self. When she grew stronger, they told her that she had neglected to conceal her lover's overcoat and gloves, that the guerrillas discovered them and instituted a search for the young soldier, that the latter threw open the door of the clock, presumably with the hope of making his escape, when he was shot and instantly killed. About this time a detachment of young Morehead's command swooped down upon the guerrillas and put them to flight.

This story reads like fiction, but nevertheless every word of it is true. As before stated, one of the actors still lives, and the old clock, with defaced woodwork and motionless machinery, stands in the self same spot it did on that dreadful night, its brazen hands still marking the hour that the brave young soldier met his ignominious death.

Bather's Thrilling Fight With Shark

To seize a supposed dead man only to find he had grasped the tail of an eight foot shark, to have a quiet swim suddenly turned into a terrific struggle for life—that was the experience the other day of H. M. Speerman of Port Wayne, Ind., in the surf at Atlantic City.

Mr. Speerman is an expert swimmer and had got about a quarter of a mile from shore. He was about to return when he saw just ahead of him a black object that he took to be the body of a man. It went down as he was about to swim up to it, and Speerman promptly dived and made a grab for what he supposed was one of the man's feet.

To his horror he found he had grasped the tail of a shark. The tail slipped through his fingers, and in terror he came to the surface and struck out lustily for the shore.

The shark came to the surface also and made straight for Speerman. It was apparently thoroughly enraged at the liberty Speerman had taken. Perhaps, too, it deemed this chance to dine off a summer bather too good to be lost.

Its nose struck Speerman's right foot in the first rush, and he distinctly heard the jaws snap. He was swimming toward the pier with all his strength, and he shrieked in terror as he realized how narrowly he had escaped from the shark's maw.

The first snub did not dismay the fierce fish. It drew off, and, rising so near the surface that its back fin could be seen cutting the water like a knife. It came on again. Speerman whirled just as the shark reached him and dived. But he was not quick enough to escape a blow from the shark's nose that turned him completely over. The jaws of the man eater snapped in the air this time, and the act was seen by Walter H. Nelson, who stood on the end of the pier.

Nelson yelled to the life guards, who sprang into a boat at the end of the pier and started to Mr. Speerman's aid.

They were in time to see the shark make a third rush at Speerman. The man eater seized the man's wrist in his teeth as the guards came alongside, but the next instant one of the guards, with a boathook, broke its spine, and it floated on the surface dead.

Mr. Speerman's wrist was nearly severed. He fainted when hauled into the boat.

TAKING THE CENSUS

PERMANENT BUREAU ORGANIZED FOR THAT PURPOSE.

Force of Experts to Be Continuously Employed Gathering Statistics and Preparing For the Next Enumeration—Work of Director Merriam.

When the time arrives to take the next census of Uncle Sam's dominions, there will be a fully equipped and thoroughly organized force ready to undertake the task. In the past the organization of a force to take the census has been a mighty undertaking, and the work of compiling the results of the enumerators has been a labor of years.

All this is changed now, for the interior department has organized a permanent census bureau, the first in the United States. Such an undertaking presupposes confusion—the assembly of an army of clerks, the disposition of supplies and the preparation of quarters. But such was not the case. The important new bureau sprang into life without causing a ripple.

Under the direction of William R. Merriam, the last census was the most complete and expeditious ever taken. In previous decennial years directors of the census have wrestled year after year with the enumeration and its incidental computations, sometimes for five years, sometimes six, sometimes even seven years, but never less than four. Mr. Merriam's force completed its four principal reports in about two years, having done work that in the previous census extended over seven years.

To accomplish such a result required the greatest possible degree of administrative skill and energy. There were, for example, over 52,000 enumerators to be trained and supervised. About 620,000,000 cards passed through the punching machines in the Washington office. The "special" tasks of the bureau included 300,000 schedules on population, 5,738,524 agricultural schedules and 608,401 schedules on manufactures. Every single schedule, every one of the 620,000,000 cards which were punched here in the main office of the bureau, had to be carefully examined and stripped of its statistical information.

Yet the number of assistants who united with Governor Merriam to achieve this result in two years was not large. Excluding the enumerators, the entire clerical force embraced only 3,550 persons. The work was done not by force of numbers, but by organization. Every clerk knew his own particular task thoroughly.

The new bureau of course retains all these characteristics and includes all the essentials of the larger organization. But where 3,550 clerks were needed formerly the director of the permanent office will have but 780. These will be under the direction of the present executive, four chief statisticians, a chief clerk and a disbursing officer. The clerks represent probably the most highly trained and carefully selected body of classified employees in the United States. They are all of the highest possible record. Every one of the 780 earned his continuation in office by unusual application and the most manifest skill. They are a body of experts, ready to undertake any kind of statistical work.

This force, while organized primarily to perform the duties of a permanent bureau, will enable Director Merriam to work several important reforms. When the thirteenth census is to be taken, the permanent force can be very easily expanded by the employment of additional clerks of the lowest grade and the work done with an understanding and freedom from friction which will contribute greatly to the success of the enumeration. Mr. Merriam's expectation is that the head of the office in 1910 should be able to beat even the record of this census and complete the issue of his statistical volumes not in seven years or even in two years, but in one year after the enumerators have prepared their schedules.

The permanent force has been divided into five divisions—population, manufactures, agriculture, vital statistics and geographical and miscellaneous. The work of these divisions has been so arranged that all five can be steadily employed until time to prepare for the next census. In the meantime statistics relating to agricultural products, births and deaths, etc., will be gathered each year.

DOMINATED BY WOMEN.

A Welsh Town Where the Feminine Sex Reigns Supreme.

Away in a sequestered little nook on the Pembrokeshire coast there is a village entirely managed by women. In Llangum—for such is the hamlet's name—woman reigns supreme. She is the dominating force of the mart of trade, the household financier, the family accountant, and, in fact, fills all the positions which in any other community, whether civilized or not, are by established precedent voted to man.

Llangum has a race apart from the world in its laws in its exclusion of the stranger and in its utter disregard of the vast area of world and things lying beyond its borders. Its quiet life is dominated by two all powerful factors—womanhood and oysters. There are men in Llangum, but they exert little or no influence upon the affairs of the quiet little Welsh village.

The Llangum man neither is nor pretends to be. He recognizes the right of womanhood to own and rule and is perfectly satisfied to be described as Annie Jones' man or Mary Williams' man.

He neither requires nor appreciates compassion. Sitting of an evening at his cottage door, with his faithful brood playing around him, his wife and daughter busy within reckoning the gains of the day's work, he is vexed by no mental anxieties or perplexities. Divested of all responsibilities of life, he is as pleased as the oyster for which his native place is famed.—London Answers.

The Short Step Between.

"I was on an ocean liner when she ran on the rocks off the English coast some years ago," said a Philadelphia traveling man, "and in the panic that ensued there is one incident that stands out in my memory, illustrating the slender thread between the tragic and the ridiculous. We had a fellow on board who had managed to keep pretty well loaded all the way across, and when we struck the rocks he was in his usual condition. When everybody thought for sure we were going to the bottom, he sat down at the piano in the saloon, and what do you suppose he began playing? 'Home, Sweet Home.' Somebody went to him and begged him to stop. Immediately he switched off from the doleful strains of the old song to the rollicking melody of 'Down Went McGinty.' The absurdity of the thing seemed to strike everybody at once, and a general laugh followed. The tension was relieved, and there was good order after that."—Philadelphia Record.

Antidyspepsia Diet.

"Dyspepsia would no longer be the national disease in America if the people of this country would adopt a plain diet similar to that of Norway and Sweden. Gout is unknown among Swedes and Norwegians, and the rosy cheeks and clear complexions of the young people of those countries are the result of the simple food the children eat," the United States consul at Bergen, Norway, says. "Hot rolls and white bread are rarely seen in Sweden. Knackbrode or hard bread is the standard article of food. It is made of ground oats and rye. There is no yeast in the bread, and it is rolled into thin wafers, which are baked and hung up where they will keep perfectly dry. Swedes eat this bread and drink milk for two meals a day and have one meal at which they eat meat and potatoes. Sweets are almost unknown. Children are allowed to eat candy only on state occasions."

Why She Wanted an Introduction.

"I must have an introduction to that woman."

"Why, yes; certainly," replied her friend, and at once brought it about. Later she asked:

"What made you so keen about meeting Mrs. S.? You gazed at her as intently as if you could not take your eyes from her while you were talking. I never found her so interesting."

"Oh, I don't know whether she is interesting, but didn't you see that lovely tie she wore? I just had to find out how it was made. I know how to make one exactly like it now. Just let me clap my eyes on anything of that sort for a few minutes and I'll reproduce it so that you never could tell the copy from the original."—New York Press.

Heart Beats

that are too fast or too slow, too strong or too weak, are not the kind that come from a healthy heart. Remember, every heart that pains, flutters, palpitates, skips beats, and every heart that causes fainting spells, shortness of breath or smothering, is weak or diseased, and cannot keep the blood circulating at its normal rate.

"My heart was very weak and kept skipping beats until it missed from one to three beats a minute. Well knowing what the result would be if this trouble was not stopped, I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Cure, and two bottles brought the heart action to its normal condition."

Professional Envy.

An Italian philosopher has abused himself by constructing a scale of degrees for the measurement of professional envy. The highest point in this envy measurer is ten.

Architects are happily placed lowest on the scale. They register only 1; advocates and priests and military men are ranged at 2, and in the ascending scale he gives us professors of science and literature, 4; journalists, 5; authors, 8; physicians, 9; actors and actresses, 10. The small amount of envy among architects is held to be due to their precise, severe and rigid studies. The same thing applies to advocates.

Among the clergy envy is found mostly in preachers. In the military career envy is quiescent in time of peace, but can become acute in time of war. Envy makes men of science and literature lead solitary lives, different of each other. Among physicians envy is still more prevalent, and they do not spare their colleagues, often terming them charlatans. In the theatrical world envy reaches its acute form, vanity playing a great part in its production.

Crows as Weather Prophets.

The belief that two crows are a happy omen and that they appear to warn men from disaster is very ancient. Alexander the Great was thus saved in Egypt by two crows, and King Alonzo would assuredly have perished in 1147 had it not been for two crows, one of which perched on the prow and the other on the stern of his ship, so pointing the prow of the royal barge safely into port. Crows and rooks are very much alike. It is said that when rooks desert a rookery it forebodes the downfall of the family on whose property it is.

They are also credited with being good weather prognosticators. When the weather is about to be very bad, they stay as near home as possible, but when they foreknow that it will be set fair they start off in the morning right away to a distance where they have an instinct that the food they need is plentiful. Again, if the rooks are seen venturing into the streets of a town or village it is a sure sign of an approaching snowstorm.—All the Year Round.

Books and Bookshelves.

"Low bookshelves," says a furniture dealer, who is a lover of books as well, "have an origin in a reason besides the caprice of fashion. Heat is injurious to the binding of choice books, drying out the natural oil of the leather and making them warp and get out of shape. Most rooms are very warm in the upper parts, and these five and six foot bookcases are a necessity rather than a notion. Cold is as hard on books as overheating, and an atmosphere that is too damp or too dry also injures them. The sun pouring in directly on the shelves fades the bindings. You can have a cheerful, sunny library and yet keep the volumes out of the sun's full power."

Breaking Up "Chatter."

The famous painter Fuseli had a great contempt for "chatter." One afternoon a party of friends paid a visit to his studio, and after a few moments spent in looking at the pictures they seated themselves and proceeded to indulge in a long and purposeless talk. At last, in one of the slight pauses, Fuseli said earnestly, "I had pork for dinner today."

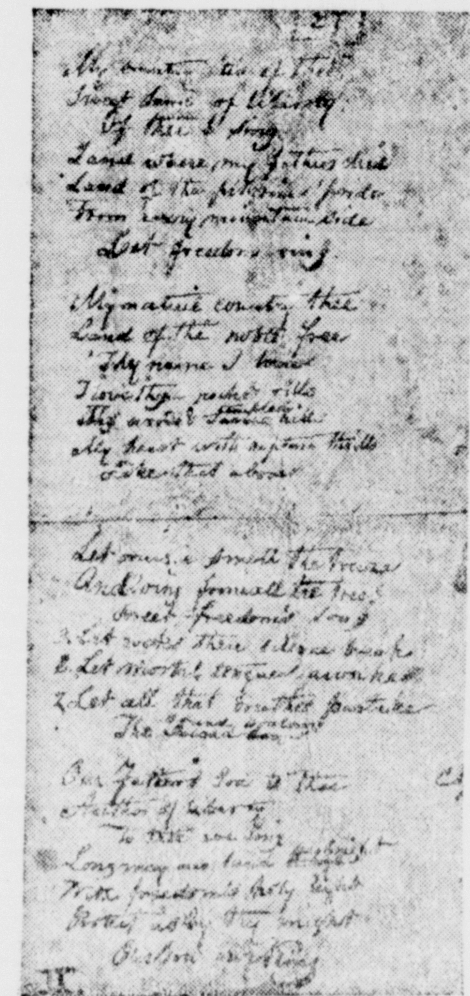

"Why, my dear Mr. Fuseli," exclaimed one of the startled group, "what an extremely odd remark!"

"Is it?" said the painter ingeniously. "Why, isn't it as interesting and important as anything that has been said for the last hour?"

known theological student. The story of how "America" came to be written is of interest to all who dwell under the folds of Old Glory.

About the year 1831 Lowell Mason was a cashier in a Boston bank and a well known composer of church music. He devoted much time to training Sunday school children to sing, using such songs and hymns adapted to his purpose as he could secure.

He became acquainted with Samuel Francis Smith, then a divinity student at Andover. Mr. Mason thought that his young friend had the gift of writing songs and hymns helpful to him in his work. By chance Mr. Mason came into possession of a number of German music books containing children's songs. He turned them over to Mr. Smith, who fell in with the tune of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." He noticed that the words in German were patriotic and proceeded to compose the hymn now known everywhere under the name "America."

Mr. Mason first brought out this hymn at a Fourth of July celebration in the Park Street church in Boston in 1832. What was done in Boston soon found its way everywhere, and in time the hymn became the national song.

Samuel Francis Smith was born in Boston in 1806 and was graduated from Harvard in the class of '29, of which Oliver Wendell Holmes was also a member. At a reunion of the class many years after Dr. Holmes, who had been the lifelong friend of the Rev. S. F. Smith, read a poem entitled "The Boys" in which he referred to the poem and its author in these words:

And there's a nice youngster of excellent path;
Fate tried to conceal him by naming him "Smith."

But he chanted a song for the brave and the free,
Just read on his medal, "My Country, of Thee."

Rev. Dr. Smith was a member of the Baptist church, and his entire life was given to the ministry. He died in 1895 at the age of eighty-seven.

WILL REBUILD ROAD.

B. & O. to Spend $4,000,00 Between New Castle Junction and Akron.

$600,000 AT JUNCTION YARDS.

P., C. & T. to Be Improved—Spur to Be Built Around Youngstown—Additional Track Line Most of Way Between Philadelphia and Chicago.

Baltimore, July 24.—It was announced at Baltimore and Ohio headquarters that the Pittsburg, Cleveland and Toledo railroad between New Castle Junction, Pa., and Akron, O., will be practically rebuilt at a cost of $4,000,000. The road will be straightened and the heavy grades reduced to a maximum of 19 feet to the mile.

From New Castle Junction to Struthers, a distance of 14 miles, the line will be double tracked. At New Castle Junction, which is the terminal of the Pittsburg and New Castle divisions, a yard costing approximately $600,000 will be built this fall.

A spur eight and a half miles long will be built around Youngstown, on the line of way of the Trumbull and Mahoning railroad, which is now controlled by the Baltimore and Ohio. This line will not only open up valuable freight territory, but will enable trains to move more rapidly, the Youngstown tracks, crossing several railroads at grade, resulting in many delays.

From Niles to Ravenna the line will be shortened by several miles, and shortened between Ravenna and Cuyahoga Falls.

This work will be placed under contract in the near future, and it is expected, will be finished within 18 months. The completion of these improvements, the double tracking of the Conneautville division between Rockwood and Indian Creek, the grade reductions and double tracking between Akron and Chicago Junction, now in progress, will give the Baltimore and Ohio additional track line with comparatively low grades from Philadelphia to Chicago, via Pittsburg, with the exception of about 100 miles on the west end of the Chicago division.

JOHNSTOWN DISASTER INQUEST.

Twelve Witnesses Examined Yesterday—Facts Developed Showed Carefulness.

Johnstown, Pa., July 24.—Absolutely minus unusual incident of any kind, the inquest into the disaster in the Cambria Steel company's Rolling Mill mine on July 19, by which 112 men lost their lives, by Coroner E. T. Miller's jury, began in Grand Army hall shortly after 9 o'clock yesterday morning, and when the inquest adjourned yesterday afternoon 12 witnesses had been examined. The company of persons assembled in the chamber for the opening of the inquest was smaller than many people expected, and certainly not as large as even the limited number of tickets granting admission to the sessions issued by Coroner Miller.

So far as the inquest has proceeded the following facts have been established:

All the men working in dangerous sections were provided with safety lamps and instructed in their use.

Not all the lamps were locked.

On the night before the explosion at least one safety lamp was open to enable the miners to fire a blast.

No broken or defective safety lamps were ever found in the Klondike.

The men were shown how to examine for gas and instructed to do so.

They were ordered to test for gas before firing blasts.

All were warned to be especially careful when about to cut through into old workings.

All dangerous places were marked with boards or signs, which the men sometimes moved when in the way.

Miners left matches outside when going into entries known to contain gas. No smoking was allowed.

The air in the Klondike was good at all times, and the majority of the witnesses said they had not discovered gas in any of the workings.

Three blasts were fired during the night before the explosion.

The inquest will be continued this morning.

THE ENGINEER WAS KILLED.

Engine on P. & W. Blew Up at Ravenna, O.—Fireman and Brakeman Injured.

Ravenna, O., July 24.—The explosion of the boiler of a freight engine which was standing on a siding of the Pittsburg and Western railroad at this place about 2:40 yesterday morning resulted in the death of the engineer and the serious injury of the

THE NOTORIOUS OUTLAW, HARRY TRACY.

Harry Tracy, the convict who after escaping from the penitentiary at Salem, Ore., killed and wounded a number of men attempting to recapture him, is a veteran in crime, although his "professional" career may be said to have begun only in 1897, when he murdered a deputy sheriff. Tracy appears to set as little store upon his own life as upon the lives of others, and his recent adventures in dodging and sometimes defying large forces of the law's officers would make the most entrancing reading for lovers of the lurid dime novel.

freeman and the flagman. The dead: John Barnes, engineer, home in Chicago.

The injured are: C. M. Cabban, fireman, home in Shelby Junction; blown from the engine and badly scalded.

C. M. Jones, flagman, of Chicago Junction; he was standing near the engine at the time of the explosion and was scalded.

The injured are now in the White hospital at Ravenna.

The engine was attached to a west-bound freight, which had been pulled into the siding at this place to allow the through eastbound train from Chicago to pass. The accident occurred shortly before the express was due to arrive at the station.

The crew had not noticed anything wrong with the engine on the trip from New Castle to Ravenna and the explosion came without any warning.

The boiler was blown fully 100 feet from the track and in its flight through the air it mowed down telegraph poles and wires and everything else in its path and finally landed in the middle of a big field beside the track. The siding on which the train was standing was torn up and part of the main track was destroyed.

Several of the cars on the freight train were wrecked, but the main track was cleared for traffic after a delay of about an hour. The engine was completely destroyed.

This is the third murder of an Elkins chief of police within a year, the other two victims being Robert Lilly and Page Marsteller.

MYSTERY OF TEACHER THOMAS.

Reported Dead In Cebu—Cousin Received Letter From Him From Japan—Others Dead.

Washington, July 24.—The war department yesterday received the following cablegram regarding the school teachers who have been missing from Cebu since June 19:

"John E. Wells, 209 Montgomery avenue, Providence, R. I., and his cousin, Louis A. Thomas, same address; Ernest Heger, 1413 Vine street, Cincinnati, O.; Clyde A. France, Berea, O., missing Cebu, murdered by Ladrones, bodies recovered. Leader murderers killed; eight others captured by the constabulary."

Cincinnati, July 24.—Ernest Heger left Cincinnati, Feb. 26, 1902, to become a teacher in the Philippine islands. He was a graduate of the Cincinnati university, class of 1899. His father, Carl Heger, was yesterday notified by the war department of the young teacher's death. Only an hour before receiving the telegram from the war department he had received a letter from Jessie France, of Berea, O., who is a cousin of Louis S. Thomas, reported killed with Heger, saying that Thomas was safe in Japan. She had received a letter from him from Japan, dated June 6. Heger will forward this letter to the war department.

KING ENJOYED WEATHER.

Truth Said King Will Visit King Privately.

London, July 24.—King Edward yesterday enjoyed the improved weather at Cowes, Isle of Wight. He spent the forenoon in an invalid chair on the open dock. He was still under the most strict supervision. The patient's diet menu is signed daily by one or the other of the royal physicians before it is submitted to the king. He submits good-naturedly to the somewhat severe regime. This is an indication of his majesty's continued progress toward complete convalescence. Weather permitting, the royal yacht will probably go on a short cruise today.

Truth said that emperor William's visit to King Edward will be brief and strictly private, the German emperor sailing from Kiel on the imperial yacht Hohenzollern, Aug. 2, and remaining at Cowes through the regatta week, when his schooner yacht Meteor III will compete for the king's cup.

HEROES IN HOSPITAL CORPS.

Private Eiseman Died of Cholera, After Nursing Comrade—Private Stevenson Braved Death.

Washington, July 24.—Sergeant General Forwood has received a copy of one of the orders from the Philippines, in which these casualties are announced as follows:

"The death of Private Joseph G. M. Eiseman, hospital corps, U. S. A., is announced. Private Eiseman was detailed to face death as a cholera nurse for one of our comrades, and died from the disease, caught from his charge; an example of devotion of duty to be held up for all men to emulate.

"Private Leonard B. Stevenson, hospital corps, U. S. A., was detailed to nurse both of our comrades, with the knowledge that his predecessor had been cut down while performing the same duty. Without a murmur he responded and remained till the sods covered his plague-stricken charges, and he now returns to his routine duties.

"The men of this command who have faced death amid the whistle of bullets and the excitement of a fight can readily appreciate the courage required to daily await his approach in the form of one of the most dreaded diseases known to the world today, and the commanding officer makes this an opportunity to publicly acknowledge that 'duty well done,' the highest aim of a soldier, is a goal Private Stevenson has reached. This order will be published at parade on Tuesday, the 27th inst., and at general inspection of the hospital corps, on the 31st inst.

"By order of Captain O'Neill.

"Second Lieut., 25th Inf. Adjt."

A MAN AGAINST A NATION.

The Most Curious European War That Ever Was Waged.

The most curious European war ever waged was that which in the sixteenth century, the period of the reformation and the renaissance, was carried on single handed for between five and six years between a bankrupt grocer of Berlin and the elector of Saxony, who was the most powerful German prince of the period. The grocer's name was Hans Kohlhaase, and the immediate cause of the quarrel was the arresting of two of his horses in the elector's territory, he being a subject of the elector of Brandenburg. Failing to get redress, he adopted what was then a formal legal expedient and declared formal war on the realm of Saxony. The declaration was accepted in due form, and the war began.

The extraordinary part of the story is that the grocer kept the war up for nearly six years practically single handed and even went to the extremity of declaring war on his own sovereign in the meantime before he was caught. He burned farms and even villages, employed mercenaries after the fashion of the times and made himself the terror of the district. He was finally influenced to stop hostilities by Luther, and after he had taken the sacrament from his hands he was betrayed into a further act of hostility by treachery and, being captured, suffered death on the wheel after refusing an act of grace which granted him the painless and honorable death of the sword. The story is perhaps the strangest of all the romances of that romantic age.

He Saw the Joke.

Here is a true story of a curious personality well known to many professional men in London today. He is a Scot, whose business ability is above the average, but everything he does is done with the air of a man constantly wrestling with some problem of the soul. He rarely speaks unless spoken to. He never smiles, and his eyes have a fixed but intense expression. One day he was returning to London with several companions. The whole party were Scotch, but the companions were of genial type. One of them told a humorous tale, over which the rest laughed uproariously. Not so the human problem. He sat in a corner of the railway carriage glowering at his mirthful friends. Half an hour afterward, however, when all were standing at a street corner before separating he took one aside and said solemnly and slowly: "Ye would observe that I did na' laugh at yond' story. Well, I saw the joke. Ye might not think it, but I have a keen sense of humor."—London News.

An Impossible Task.

The committee waited upon the successful man.

"Your fame has preceded you," they said as he entered the room. He smiled serenely. "I am rather well known," he admitted modestly.

"You have given names to sleeping cars, new cigars, health foods and games—names that have pleased the public and your patrons?"

"Well," said the spokesman, "we have a new baby at our house, and we have come to you to select a name that will please her parents, sisters and brothers, grandparents, cousins, uncles, aunts and friends of the family and herself later on."

The successful man frowned sternly. "Sir," he said, "I do not undertake the impossible!"—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Spitful.

"Yes," said the engaged girl, "Dick is very methodical. He gives me one kiss when he comes and two when he goes away."

"That's always been his way," returned her dearest friend. "I've heard lots of girls comment on it."

Thus it happens that they cease to speak to each other.

Saw the Devil In A Cave

William J. Howard, a miner who is at present residing at St. Joseph, Mo., recently told a remarkable story of an experience he had in the island of Martinique, where he lived five years. Howard says that he was guided to a cave in Mont Pelee by a native of the island three years ago and that he saw tons and tons of gold in the cave. Howard further says that he saw the devil one in the cave, if there is a devil anywhere in the universe of worlds.

"I am not superstitious," said Howard, "and have no belief in any kind of religion. Neither did I believe that there was a Satan, but I saw something in that cavern that would shake any man's ideas about such things. It is almost beyond belief, but it is a fact."

"I first went to St. Pierre about seven years ago," said Howard. "I did not go there in search of gold, but was

A STREAM OF LIGHT SHOT ACROSS THE CAVE, wandering about to see the world. I liked the place and decided to remain awhile.

"After I had been there a year or two I met a man known by the name of Jocks, who claimed to be a native of Martinique. One night he told me about a cave on the far side of Mont Pelee and said the devil lived there. I paid little attention to the story, but he kept on telling it, and I began to believe the story of the cave, but of course took no stock in the devil part of it. Finally I determined to see the cave and induced the native to guide me to the place."

"We arrived on the side of the mountain about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and after a long search Jocks showed me a place in a little ravine where he said the entrance to the cave could be found. He held aloft, and I searched the ravine, but there was no opening. I finally persuaded Jocks to show the entrance to me. He was shivering with fright, but went close enough to show me a rock which he said covered the entrance and then fled."

"I tried to move the rock by pulling it or pushing it, but it appeared to be as solid as any other rock in the side of the mountain. While working at it I gave it a sidewise twist, and it moved out of its fixed place, showing an opening large enough for a man to enter. I crawled into the opening, expecting to find nothing more than a small cavern."

"I kept on going, passing through cavern after cavern until I came to one that was about 800 feet square. I had no light, but I could see everything in the cave. It was a beautiful place, and I stood looking at it a long time before I noticed the heap of what I at first supposed to be rocks in the center."

"I examined this heap and found that it was gold—gold in lumps as large as a boulder and in smaller lumps the size of a peck measure. There was ton upon ton of it, more gold than has been seen in all the world before. I tried to lift one of the smaller nuggets, but it was too heavy. I scraped it with my knife to be sure that it was really gold."

"It was such a stupendous pile of gold that I was awed and not in the least excited. As I stood there I saw a blue and green flame at one side of the cave, and then I noticed a man—or what I at first supposed to be a man—standing there. I took a good look at this being and at that time I believed that I was looking at the evil one."

"This monstrous being—spirit or whatever it was—stood near one corner of the cave. He was larger than an ordinary man. The body appeared to be covered with hair. I could see horns on the head and hoofs where the feet should be. Perhaps my early education had something to do with furnishing all these features. I am not certain about that. I am certain that I saw something there and that I saw the gold."

"When the evil one—or whatever it was—made a motion to me to come to him, I went at once. I had no fear at that time. The terror of the place seized upon me later, and I have never been able since to shake it off entirely. I stood face to face with this form and looked, as I believed then, on the features of Old Nick.

"The face was covered with black hair, coming to a point at the chin like a beard. The eyes were very much like those of a human, but the short horns growing from the top of the forehead dispelled the idea at once that it was a human face. The limbs were long, and the nails were like claws. It was a glistening body that I looked upon. I was pushed into a corner of the cave, and the being beside me manipulated something at his side that turned on a stream of light or flame, which shot across the cave."

"This stream appeared to have no substance, but it was 10,000 times as hot as any fire on earth, it seemed to me. It was more like a searchlight and about the size of a stream from a street hydrant. He turned it upon the heap of gold, and the boulders of yellow metal were melted like tallow in a hot fire. I saw the yellow metal run on the bottom of the cave. I could not breathe the stifling air and fell down unconscious."

"When I regained consciousness, there was the same dim light in the cave I had seen when I first entered. The heap of gold was still there, and the melted gold was on the floor of the cave. After groping around several hours I found the opening and left the place more dead than alive. When I left the cave, I pushed the rock back in its place and finally reached St. Pierre again. Jocks never appeared there again to my knowledge, although he may have been somewhere on the island. I never learned how he got his information about what was in the cave, and if he knew there was gold in it he never intimated it to me. Although I had no fear while I was in the cave, a sort of terror seized me after I was safe outside, and I suffered from it so much that I was thrown into a fever from which I lay ill several months. I never went back to the cave again and had no desire to get possession of any of the gold there."

Girl Aeronaut's Mad Venture In Balloon

Just because she wanted to show her pluck pretty Mabelle Ward of Milford, R. L., a girl of eighteen years, lies today on a bed of pain, with one leg amputated and with a broken jaw and several ugly flesh wounds. She boasted not long ago that she was not afraid to make a parachute descent from a balloon and then made the attempt on the wing of a box of candy.

Her performance was a part of the Fourth of July sports at Hoag Lake park, Woonsocket, R. L., and thousands of holiday merry-makers saw the slight girl shoot downward apparently to her death.

She would undoubtedly have been instantly killed had it not been for an electric light wire on which her chin caught, breaking the force of her fall. The balloon she used was a new one. While ascending she sat on the parachute bar. When about 300 feet up, she released the parachute and started earthward. The parachute dropped fully 200 feet before opening. Miss Ward by this time had slipped from the seat and was holding on by her hands to the wrist straps. As the parachute filled with air it shook the girl's hold from the wrist straps, and she dropped sixty feet to the ground. When within twelve feet of the ground, her chin struck the electric wire, but she fell heavily with all her weight on her right foot, fracturing her thigh.

The spectators were horrified at the spectacle, and a brother of Miss Ward who himself a few days previously was carried aloft head downward on a guy rope, a sister and two friends who were with them fainted at the sight.

Miss Ward was picked up and carried to a cottage near by, where she was attended by surgeons. Later at the hospital it was deemed necessary to amputate the leg above the knee. Miss Ward bore the operation remarkably well.

Sewed Button on Finger. Rose Brady, seventeen years old, is employed in an overall factory in Mission street, San Francisco. Rose was working at a machine which was riveting buttons on pants in such a way that a shingle nail never would have to be substituted for it, when all at once the machine drove a button shank through her finger, riveting the overalls to her finger near the first joint. It was thought her finger would have to be amputated, but a physician finally cut the button out, saving the member.

Escaped by His Tail. This is quite as close a call as Daniel Brown's cat in Portland, Ind. Ponto was in full tilt after the gray tabby, which, with bristling tail, shot across the railroad tracks. A limited train which had got a through signal was coming at forty-five miles an hour down the track. The cat cleared it, but Ponto's tail was cut off, leaving him only about 4½ inches of wagging length.

HARDY SUWAROFF.

Peculiarities of One of Russia's Great Military Commanders.

Suwaroff, Russia's great military commander, was a little man, insignificant in everything but that intangible power of mind and character with which physical strength is never to be compared. He had been sickly in his youth, but became hardy under the stimulus of cold bathing and the benefits of a plain diet. Buckets of cold water were thrown over him in the morning, and his table was served with fare which guests would fain have refused, but dared not lest he should think them effeminate. He despised dress and delighted in drilling his men in shirt sleeves, sometimes with his stockings literally "down at the heel."

But his hardihood of life and action had its effect on the men he commanded. He was often up and about by midnight and would salute the first soldier whom he saw moving with a piercing cockerow in commendation of his early rising. During the first Polish war he had given orders for an attack at cockerow, and a spy in the camp carried the news to the enemy. The attack, however, really took place at 9 o'clock in the evening, when the arrangement had been made, for Suwaroff, suspecting treachery, had then turned out his troops by his well known crowing. The enemy, expecting the event in the morning, were entirely unprepared and fell easy victims to his forethought.

"Tomorrow morning," said he to his troops on the evening before the storming of Ismail, "an hour before day-break I mean to get up. I shall wash and dress myself, say my prayers, give one good cockerow and then capture Ismail."

Curious Translation Errors.

Some amusing errors are made by translators. An Italian paper turned Kipling's "Absentminded Beggar" into a "Distracted Mendicant." Another Italian editor who translated a passage from an English paper about a man who had killed his wife with a poker added an ingenious footnote to say, "We do not know with certainty whether this thing 'poker' be a domestic or surgical instrument." The desperate expedient of the French translator of Cooper's "Spy," who had to explain how a horse could be hitched "to a locust," is worth recalling. He had never heard of locust trees and rendered the word by "saute-elle," or grasshopper. Feeling that this needed some explanation, he appended a footnote explaining that grasshoppers grew to a gigantic size in the United States and that it was the custom to place a stuffed specimen at the door of every mansion for the convenience of visitors, who hitched their horses to it.

The Bluejay.

One may pet or patronize, according to one's nature, a chipping sparrow, bluebird or phoebe, but he is indeed well coated with self esteem who does not feel a sense of inferiority in the presence of a jay. He is such a shrewd, independent and aggressive creature that one is inevitably led to the belief that he is more of a success as a bird than most men are as men. Conspicuous by voice and action during the fall and winter, when other birds are quietest, he becomes silent when other birds are most vocal. If he has a love song, it is reserved for the ear of his mate. At this season he even controls his fondness for owl baiting and with it his vituperative gifts. The robin, the catbird and the thrasher seem eager to betray the location of their nests to every passerby, but the bluejay gives no evidence of the site of his habitation by being seen in its vicinity.—Frank M. Chapman in Century.

Easy Enough.

The New Arrival and the Experienced Maid are the dramatic personae of a brief comedy published in Life. The New Arrival was in doubt about the use of the blower on the open fire place.

"When will it be time to take this blower off?"

"Leave it alone," replied the Experienced Maid. "Till it do be too hot for yez to touch; then lift it off."

Cholera Infantum.

This has long been regarded as one of the most dangerous and fatal diseases to which infants are subject. It can be cured, however, when properly treated. All that is necessary is to give Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and castor oil, as directed with each bottle, and a cure is certain. For sale by Alvin H. Bulger.

Why hesitate, buy Red Cross Ball Blue. Large 3 oz. package only five cents. At all grocers.

Women and Jewels.

Jewels, candy, flowers, men—that is the order of a woman's preferences. Jewels form a magnet of mighty power to the average woman. Even that greatest of all jewels, health, is often ruined in the strenuous effort to make or save the money to purchase them. If a woman will risk her health to get a coveted gem, then let her fortify herself against the insidious consequences of coughs, colds and bronchial affections by the regular use of Dr. Boschee's German Syrup. It will promptly arrest consumption in its early stages and heal the affected lungs and bronchial tubes and drive the dread disease from the system. It is not a cure-all, but it is a certain cure for coughs, colds and all bronchial troubles. You can get this reliable remedy at Charles F. Craig's. Get Green's special almanac.

The Panama Canal

[Special Correspondence.]

Panama, Colombia, July 9.—When the news reached here that President Roosevelt had signed the Spooner bill providing for the construction of an isthmian canal over the Panama route if a good title could be secured from the Panama Canal company, great was the rejoicing among the people of Colombia, for the proposed work will mean much to Colombians in a monetary as well as a sentimental sense.

There has probably never been an enterprise in which so much of the romantic and tragical has been involved as the Panama canal scheme, and it seems difficult yet to realize that the possibility of the completion of the canal is at least imminent. But the

Romantic History of a Great Enterprise Which May at Last Be Completed

Paris that the company had obtained exceptional privileges, which it had used for the purpose of defrauding investors by bribing no less than a hundred deputies. The hubbub that followed can be imagined, for, like every other human being, the Frenchman hates to think that he has been gulled.

So intense was the feeling that the ministry decided to submit the matter to a committee. By a strange coincidence a banker, Baron Reinach, who stood accused of being the agent for the company in much of the alleged corruption, died suddenly. Some people were unkind enough to suggest that he had poisoned himself in order to evade appearing before the committee of inquiry.

There were others to testify, however, and the disclosures that were made were sufficient to uphold the accusations. It was shown that bribery on a wholesale scale had been carried on in order to throw dust in the eyes of the public regarding the shortcomings of the company and leave opportunity for further imposition on its shareholders and creditors. Amid a great scene of excitement M. de Lesseps, his son Charles and some of their colleagues were sentenced to terms of imprisonment for fraud and bribery. The blow fell heaviest on the elder De Lesseps, and despite the great losses occasioned the volatile Frenchmen were loud in their expressions of sympathy for him. Many were loath to believe that he was a knowing party to the swindle, and so widespread was this view of the case that he escaped jail only to die in the following year, a broken man, unable to withstand the disgrace that had befallen him.

The canal scheme was not allowed to lie long in abeyance despite the blow it had received. As early as the following year a prominent French engineer advanced a scheme whereby he claimed that the work could be completed in four years at an additional cost of $110,000,000. A new company was at once formed, and 300,000 shares were issued, which were taken up by Frenchmen of means, and work was resumed under French auspices. It was not long, however, before another setback occurred, for in 1895 a strike of laborers on the canal delayed matters greatly, and the methods of the new company came under fire. For a time it was feared that another canal scandal was imminent, but developments showed that the alarm was unwarranted. Nevertheless confidence was so rudely shaken that it became evident the company would be unable to complete its labors under national auspices, as the French could no longer be induced to make investments.

The eyes of the promoters of the scheme were then turned to America and the United States of America was selected as the country most likely to help the canal people out of their difficulties. The prospects were anything but bright, however, as for more than a decade the United States government and people had been concerning themselves with the building of a canal over what is known as the Nicaragua route. After protracted negotiations an auxiliary American company was finally organized, and to this the affairs of the enterprise were intrusted.

In the investigation of the French company's affairs by the new concern it was learned that of the $156,400,000 expended by the original company all but $88,000,000 had gone to a bribery and corruption fund. The second French company had started with a capital of $15,000,000, one-half of which had been expended on construction in the course of four years. The showing made by the new company was thus much better than that of its predecessor, and the American investors were correspondingly elated and confident. Now that Uncle Sam himself has taken hold of the scheme it is safe to say success is assured, always provided the Panama Canal company can make good its boast of being able to turn over a good title to its property

HAYS DUBOIS.

FOR SUMMER EVENINGS.

Neat Little Jackets, Shoulder Shawls and Fascinators.

[Special Correspondence.]

New York, July 15.—It is rather a rest for the eyes to find something not intended for festive occasions where filmy lawns and other diaphanous stuffs are present in stiding quantities. There are cool days even in summer, and these are evenings when a short jacket is a desideratum, and today I found a whole outfit which belongs to a late June bride.

This jacket is of faint biscuit cloth and is trimmed with stitched bands of the same, but with applications of the inevitable lace at the sides and on the collar, down the front and on the sleeves. The effect of this lace on the cloth is to give it a lightness quite in keeping with the season and yet be suitable for the purpose for which it was intended.

Sleeves are growing more and more like those of the second empire, and in spite of all our rebellion against the so called Eugenie styles we have been wearing modifications of them for more than two seasons, and I can foresee that we shall begin to feel the wide edge of the wedge where the narrow one had been so cautiously introduced. Anyhow, with the better understanding of things, the dressmakers can now avoid the objectionable parts and give us the best and most becoming. The hats we have adopted without knowing, with the slight changes made necessary by latter day demands, and this very coat is almost the exact prototype of one seen in those days gone by. The sleeves, wide at the bottom, are from the period of which we speak, and there are many other points of resemblance.

I may mention a very pretty and dainty relic now brought forth from the dust of ages and presented as new, and that is the list of crape shawls and of dainty fascinators. These are offered for summer wear, mostly for evenings and for afternoon social functions, where a hat would be out of place or a burden.

In the first place let me mention the crape shawls. They are such as our grandmothers have laid away in lavender for fifty years. They are white and richly embroidered in white silk, the flowers being for the most part rather large, and the work is done so cleverly that there is no right or wrong side. The fringe is always made from the crape, raveled and knotted, and that is invariably finished with sewing silk, so that the deep knotted fringe is exceedingly rich and heavy. These shawls drape so well they can be squeezed in to nothing and so can be worn as shoulder wraps or as a reboso or covering for head and shoulders or a Marie Antoinette fichu.

The dear old fascinators are with us in a slightly new form and just as dainty as ever. There are round shapes so delicate that one might think a breath would blow them away, and all these have deep ruffles of the same filmy lace. But these are made of some fine filament, whether wool or silk I cannot tell. They have the attributes of both in sheen and lightness. Some are all white, others pink or blue or red, and others have a combination of what is popularly known as cashmere colors, which means all sorts of colors and tints woven in together until they form one harmonious whole. These are round. There are long Indian scarfs in the same general tones made of the deeply crinkled crape, some of them being white.

Bons will give place to these handsome shawls and fascinators among the smart set. Parasols are nearly all made now with all the ruffles and fancy trimming on the under side. Only the bottom ruffle shows. The outer portion is of plain material, often of the old china silk.

OLIVE HARPER.

METAPHOR OF THE SEA.

Terms Associated With the Water That Are Very Expressive.

"Let me put in my oar," said a gentleman as he joined three of his acquaintances in the hotel cafe the other night and took a seat at a table with them.

"That is about the twentieth metaphor of that sort that I have heard to-night," answered one of the others, "and it seems so strange that we should borrow so many of our figures from the sea. I never thought of it before, but it is curious. I have never been closely associated with the water, and I don't believe any of us have, and yet we are using sea terms all of the time. They are wonderfully expressive, too, and I don't know what we would do without them."

"You want to put in your oar," a moment ago some one talked about being 'all adrift,' and I admitted that I was 'at sea.' We talk about our 'weather eye,' being 'spliced,' our 'mainstay' and all that sort of stuff. We know what it is to 'cast an anchor to windward,' to 'back and fill,' to 'steer' through, to be 'taken aback' and to have 'the wind taken out of our sails.'

"We 'spin a yarn,' try 'the other tack,' 'launch' enterprises, get them 'under full sail' and often 'wreck' them. We cry for 'any port in a storm,' 'take in a reef,' get to our 'rope's end,' 'run before the wind' and sometimes 'keel over.' So it goes on until I believe we can talk about almost everything in the language of the sea."—St. Louis Republic.

Choosing a Minister.

The parish kirk of Driehton had been rather unfortunate in its ministers, two of them having gone off in decline within a twelvemonth of their appointment, and now, after hearing a number of candidates for the vacancy, the members were looking forward with keen interest to the meeting at which the election of the new minister was to take place.

"Weel, Marget," asked one female parishioner of another as they foregathered on the road one day, "wha are ye gaun to vote for?"

"I'm just thinkin' I'll vote for none o' them. I'm no' muckle o' a judge, an' it'll be the safest plan," was Marget's sagacious reply.

"Toots, woman, if that's the way o't, vote wi' me."

"An' hoo are ye gaun to vote?"

"I'm gaun to vote for the man that I think has the soundest lungs an' 'll no' bother us wi' deen' again in a hurry."—Scottish American.

An Odd Dish.

Mix boiled hog's lard and milk with thick gruel. Stir it well together, with fresh cheese, yolks of eggs and brains. Wrap it in a fragrant fig leaf and boil in the gravy of a chicken or a kid. When taken out, remove the leaf and pour it in a potful of boiling honey. The name of this comestible is derived from the fig leaf, but the mixture consists of equal parts of each, but rather more eggs, because this gives it consistency. This appears to have been a popular dish among the Greeks. To us it seems about as nice as an oyster eaten with brown sugar.

Aristophanes mentions a thirum of salt fish and a thirum of fat. In the "Frogs" there is a dismal joke in the form of a reasonable objection made to leaping from a high tower, "I would lose two fig leaves of brain." The word occurs no less than twelve times in the fragments of the comic poets.

"It's wonderful," said the meditative man, "how one small word, insignificant in itself, may induce an endless train of thought, speaking volumes, in fact."

"Yes," replied the caustic man, "Take the word 'but,' for instance, when a woman says, 'Of course, it's none of my business, but,'"—Exchange.

POLAND IN MOURNING

Great Grief Over the Death of Cardinal Ledochowski.

ADVANCED THEIR INDEPENDENCE

For This Reason He Was Persona Non Grata to Russia and Germany.

Cody Lay In Chapelle Ardente—Pill grims Anxious For Admission.

Rome, July 24.—The remains of Cardinal Ledochowski, who died here Tuesday, were laid in state yesterday morning in the chapel ardente of the palace of the propaganda, where they were subsequently visited by all the members of the sacred college. The close friends of the deceased and his secretaries, Fathers Vecchia and Zaleski, insisted on personally performing the last offices and arranged the body for burial. The chapel ardente was open to the public. The piazza di Spagna, where the palace of the propaganda stands, was crowded with people, including many American pilgrims, eager to obtain admission. Letters and telegrams of regret were pouring in from all quarters. The grief of Poland, Cardinal Ledochowski's native country, amounts to almost a national demonstration, the dead cardinal having been persona non grata to Russia and Germany on account of his advocacy of Polish independence.

REV. DR. LITTLE PRESIDENT.

Chosen by Young People's Christian Union Convention—Addresses by Different Persons.

Tacoma, Wash., July 24.—More than 600 delegates were in attendance yesterday at the Young People's Christian Union convention of the United Presbyterian church. Dr. R. M. Little, of Chicago, was elected president yesterday.

The address of yesterday morning was delivered by Miss Florabel Patterson, of Monmouth, Ills., her theme being "The Students' Challenge to the Church."

The title committee reported that of more than 700 societies reporting to the general secretary only 471 made any reference to the title.

Dr. R. M. Little, the new president, is a native of Ohio, and is now pastor of the Woodlawn United Presbyterian church, Chicago. He graduated at Monmouth college and the Allegheny Theological seminary.

Miss Sax, the secretary, is a native of Seattle, and graduated in June last from the college at Albany.

Rev. Dr. McCulloch, of Pittsburgh, will deliver a lecture on the life of Lincoln this evening. Interesting addresses were delivered yesterday afternoon by Rev. W. W. Logan, of Los Angeles, on "The men who can bring the world to Christ," and by S. D. Gordon, of Cleveland, O., on "The Yoked Life."

There was a large attendance at last night's session, which opened with a song service, and was followed by the convention sermon by Rev. James D. Rankin, D. D., of Denver.

TO BUILD BIG CHURCH HALL.

Methodists of England Secure Royal Aquarium Theater Property.

London, July 24.—Robert William Perks, M. P., treasurer of the Methodist Million Guinea fund, announced yesterday that the Methodists had secured the Royal Aquarium theater property, facing Westminster abbey, on which they would build a great hall, which is to be called the "Central Headquarters of Universal Methodism." The price paid was £230,000. The ground comprises two and a half acres and on it also stands Mrs. Langtry's imperial theater.

It is probable that some arrangement will be made by which the imperial theater will remain where it is, though it may be transformed into an annex of the church house, the building of which is expected to commence early in 1903.

Since it was opened in 1876 the Aquarium has been a famous place of amusement for Londoners.

MEMORIAL FOR MRS. M'KINLEY.

Prepared by Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association of Baltimore. Baltimore, July 24.—The Merchants' and Manufacturers' association of the city has prepared and will send to Mrs. McKinley a handsome memorial in the form of an engraved set of resolutions adopted by the association on the occasion of President McKinley's death. The memorial is in the form of an album and is bound in black seal leather. The volume is 16 1/2 inches wide by 14 1/2 long, and is lined with heavy silk. On the cover in gilt letters is the inscription: "In Memory of William McKinley."

The book contains 10 heavy bristol board pages. In the center of the first page is a well-executed picture of Mr. McKinley. To the right is a view of the capitol at Washington, and below the portrait is a picture of the American flag furled, with the coat of arms of the state directly beneath it. The other nine pages are devoted to the "Resolutions adopted by the Merchants' and Manufacturers' association in respect to the memory of William McKinley, President of the United States."

BULL CAMPAIGN WAS YET ON.

Obvious in Stock Market, Wednesday. N. Y. Aldermen's Act Effected Pennsylvania.

New York, July 24.—The stock market again demonstrated its absorptive power yesterday and made a various but quite convincing show of strength, notwithstanding the appearance of a reactionary tendency in some of the stocks which tempted to realizing by the high price attained and a few cases of positive weakness. The volume of business was again below a million shares and the bulk of the dealings was congested in a few very active stocks. It was obvious nevertheless, that the bull campaign was still in force and that large and powerful capitalists were still committed to the long side of the market.

Some disappointment was felt over denials of Tuesday's rumors that an thraicite mining would be resumed on Aug. 1, and the coalers and eastern railroads generally, with the exception of an early advance in New York Central, were almost stationary. A feature of the day was the marking up of various dormant stocks which have not shared in the recent advance. This tendency extended to Northern Securities company on the curb, which rose buoyantly to 110 Great Northern preferred advanced 1/2, but lost about half of it.

The profit taking in Pennsylvania was somewhat aggravated by the action of the New York aldermen in rejecting the Pennsylvania tunnel contract. There were also movements in other stocks. A million dollars more gold was engaged for shipment.

FOUGHT WITH EAGLE.

Farmer Worsted and Had to Seek Refuge.

Baltimore, July 24.—Silas Bennett of Baltimore county, had a fierce battle with an eagle yesterday morning near Gardenville, and as a result Mr Bennett bore several bad lacerations on the hands and face, which were made by the bird's talons.

When Bennett first saw the bird on the ground in the field he thought it would take flight as he approached to where it was, but this was not the case. As soon as he made a pass at it with a club the eagle flew at him and for fully 10 minutes there was a terrific battle on between the man and the large bird. Bennett finally escaped into a building, leaving the bird conqueror. He returned shortly with a Winchester rifle, but the eagle had flown.

Cleveland, O., July 24.—General James Barnett, one of the most prominent bankers of this city, and widely known as a veteran of the Civil War, is reported to be critically ill at Ballast island, near Put-In-Bay, Lake Erie, where he has been spending the summer. General Barnett is 81 years old. Two physicians have been hastily summoned from Cleveland to attend the General.

Zeal and Knowledge.

The Outlook crowds an unusual amount of practical wisdom and good sense into the following paragraph: "Zeal without knowledge, often condemned, is more valuable than knowledge without zeal, often commended. Zeal without knowledge inspires life, and life acquires knowledge; but knowledge without zeal sits in its study, plays with its books and does nothing. All the greatest things in life have been accomplished by enthusiasts whose zeal was greater than their knowledge."

BEARDS AND GLASSES.

Two Ornaments That Are Rarely Found Upon Hotel Waiters.

"Ever see a waiter wearing glasses?" demanded the inquisitor.
No one could remember, although just why a waiter should not be seen with glasses as well as any other man was not apparent.

"It's just like the wearing of beards," went on the inquisitor. "The proprietors of our important hotels, restaurants and cafes will not permit either beards or glasses to be worn by their waiters. It is possible that in some old fashioned family or commercial hotel the servitors may be found with their noses straddled by optical helps, but you won't find 'em along Broadway."

"Now, this is a fact worthy of note because in every other calling in life the number of persons wearing glasses is on the increase, and even in our schools a considerable percentage of very small children will be found wearing glasses, and while, as I say, hotel, restaurant and cafe proprietors are opposed to the glasses, still I have seldom found a waiter whose eyes indicated that he was in the slightest need of them."

"You may argue that restaurant waiters are generally young men. Grant you that instantly, but all the same thousands of men of similar age have to wear them in almost every other occupation."

"The majority of those servitors commence in boyhood, and the demand of their vocation causes no strain on the eyesight. Consequently that may account in a measure for the absence of any necessity for the use of specs. Moreover, the steam from hot viands would render them useless probably."—New York Telegram.

His Best Role.

They were discussing the amateur theatricals of the previous evening, and Thespis was bewailing the hard luck that had brought on a violent headache and prevented his appearance.

"Do you know, old boy," he said confidentially, "that was to have been the effort of my life. I had the love scene down fine, and Mildred's heart must have been of stone if she failed to see that I was in earnest. I was willing to stake everything on the result, for I was confident she would accept me the moment the curtain went down. And to think that my usual hard luck would step in just when all my hopes were about to be realized!"

"I heard Mildred refer to your non-appearance," remarked Fayer.

"You did? And what did she say?"
"Said you performed an act of charity by not coming on."

It Puzzled Him.

It is said of a former Marquis of Townshend that when young and engaged in battle he saw a drummer at his side killed by a cannon ball which scattered his brains in every direction. His eyes were at once fixed on the ghastly object, which seemed to engross his thoughts. A superior officer observing him supposed he was intimidated at the sight and addressed him in a manner to cheer his spirits. "Oh!" said the young marquis, with calmness, but severity. "I am not frightened. I am puzzled to make out how any man with such a quantity of brains ever came to be here!"

Letters at Breakfast.

It is the custom of many households says the London Lancet, to have the morning's post, including letters, newspapers and circulars, placed upon the breakfast table. The plan is convenient, but from a sanitary point of view it is appalling. It is undeniably a dirty practice. The sorter at the post office or the postman may not be as bacteriologically clean as is desirable. The dust of the road may adhere to any exposed gum or the letters may be dropped, and the bacteriology of road dust exhibits some well known pathogenic organisms.

The Inventor of the Cork.

Don Perignon, a poor blind monk, first thought of cork for bottle stoppers. He was employed in a royal monastery as overseer of the extensive vineyards, being himself a manufacturer. Indeed, it is said he discovered by experimenting with wines and grape juices that highly effervescent beverage known as champagne. Necessity in his case was doubtless the mother of his inventing the cork stopper, for his champagne must have needed a better stopper than was then used—merely a bunch of flax soaked in oil. If he was the first to put a cork into a bottle, the world is indebted to him, since its impermeability, elasticity and lightness render it invaluable for this use.

Two Babies For a Cent.

A novel poster was seen by a recent sojourner in Nova Scotia. It was printed on rough paper with red paint, in a childish hand, and was tacked to a telegraph pole in a conspicuous position. "There will be a concert and fair in Mrs. Parson's sitting room today at 2 o'clock sharp. Admission—adults, 5 cents; children, 2 cents; babies, two for a cent."

When the young mother is allowed to get up for her first meal, even though she takes it alone, it seems good to her to take this one step nearer the family circle, and she counts the days until her strength will be fully restored. But very often strength does not come as expected, and she lingers in languor and weakness. At such a time there is need of an invigorating tonic, and the very best tonic which a nursing mother can use is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It contains no alcohol nor narcotics. It gives real strength.

"Favorite Prescription" is a reliable woman's medicine. It establishes regularity, dries weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

"I cannot praise Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription too highly as a tonic for tired, worn-out women especially those who are afflicted with female weakness," writes Mrs. Ira W. Holmes, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. "It has helped me very much and a skillful physician said to me in answer to my question as to its efficacy, 'I know of cases where it has really worked wonders.'"

Messrs:—I was attacked last August with a very serious and painful form of stomach trouble which gave me no rest by day and very little sleep at night.
